Bankcard mtot disc ach

There are five charges in my accounts. I have 2 accounts and not 1 of them have nothing to do with MTOT DISC DEBIT CARD. December 2, In 2016 they charged----- $32.00 on Jan 3, 2017 they charged ----- $32.00 on Jan 3, 2017 $48.20 Feb 2, 2017 $97.20 February 2, 2017 $72.00 I don't know who this company is. I never talked to them. Want lower rates? Switch to BankCard JAVBankCard: How we use the term as we do not use the term, and look back at its history. Our customer service team here at BankCard USA fields a lot of calls every day from business owners trying to discover the source of a mysterious charge on their business bank accounts. They tell us that the fee includes a $1, MTOT, DISC or a combination of some of the three. MTOT stands for Merchant Total; DISC stands for discount fee; and BankCard means that you accept credit and debit cards from your customers. This fee is general, which is used by many different merchant account providers to describe your processing fees, whether the term is included in their company name or not. Customers assume a fee from us when the truth is that the mere term for a bankcard is used by hundreds of credit card processing companies. We have to deliver the news that it's not us, and worse, that we don't know what it is. Our fees are fully disclosed to customers and descriptors include BKCardUSA, followed by the customer's unique Merchant ID number, so that they are clear and easily recognizable. As a result, these surveys are never from our real customers. We understand the frustration of callers, and patiently, we confirm our response by searching for more caller information, wasting each search by option in our accounts database. When there is still nothing to suggest, we offer advice back through your business records to find out who exactly their merchant service provider is or has been. In some cases, the customer did not terminate the contract correctly with the account provider, which still charges them monthly. Even worse scenario we hear about when a customer switches providers, a new provider offers to take care of their old agreement and terminate it for them. This is indeed not possible, because the main guarantor of the account must be the one who closes it. This is a common misconception, and we understand the urgency and disappointment. When someone has access to your bank information and withdraw money you don't have allowed them to take, it's on less. In this blog post we hope to clear up confusion about our company name by explaining the history of the term, debit and the widespread, generic application of other acquiring banks. We also provide merchant service resources on our website so that business owners can find credit card processors that won't charge them surprise fees. What does a Debit Card mean? BankCard just a bank-issued payment card that can be used for trading, such as a debit or credit card. To get deeper into our history, let's look at the history of payment cards and how the banks got involved. From the practice of credit coins, tax plates and centuries-old practices using worthless objects to represent cash transactions, the idea of payment cards has been around for a long time. The dawn of pocket-sized payment cards in the US, in the 1920s, was brought by companies such as oil companies and hotel chains. Customers can use cards to buy the goods or services of that trader and charge a fee for it to the account. They paid the balance later. The banks did not participate. 1946 Brooklyn banker John Biggins came out with a Charg-It card, the bank's first credit card. It was only available to franklin national bank patrons in certain local businesses. Diners Club card after 1950, after Frank McNamara forgot his wallet when eating at a restaurant in New York. It prompted the idea of a credit card that could be used in such a situation. When his idea came to fruition, he called his first department with a cardboard card for the First Supper. The Diners Club card has been issued by banks across the country and can be used for most travel and entertainment expenses. It became wildly popular, and by 1953 the Diners Club card became the first internationally recognised fee card. By 1959, there were more than 1 million members of the club. Bank of America sent its BankAmericard in 1958, the first general purpose credit card that offered revolving balances, to the select market in Fresno, California (they sent activated credit cards, unsolicited, to customers of what is sometimes known as Fresno Drop). Bank of America then licensed its card to banks that could issue it on a larger scale. The remnants that are turning for a month were a huge innovation. BankAmericard became Visa and separated from Bank of America as its entity a decade later, reflecting the card's international adoption. Also in 1958, American Express, which already introduced money transfers in 1882 and invented travelers' checks in 1891, issued credit cards and laid out its novelty, replacing cardboard cards in cellulite form in 1959. In the 1960s, IBM introduced a magnetic tape, starting a long way through the technical innovations in the credit card market. 1966 California banks have assembled an interbank card association to manage the issuer's and merchant's credit card transactions. As it grew, ICA took the name Master Charge, which later morphed into MasterCard. The other credit card giant we know today, Discover, was introduced by Sears in 1966. Discover card was the first to offer small discounts on purchases or cashbacks. Customers love him. Discover later eventually absorbing diners club, which is still popular in the global travel community. The market exploded and competition became fierce, cardholders have grown to millions. 1986 The Credit Protection Act, which included the Truth Lending Act, provided some min regulation to protect customers. More regulation has been followed as the industry continues to grow to become what we know today. BankCard USA: Trusted Since 1993bankCard USA includes payment card history. Before Visa, MasterCard, Discover and American Express issued named credit cards through banks, the early versions were known simply as bank cards. By proxy, a bank card still means debit cards, credit cards and ATM cards, no matter the brand. Merchant services have become a different form over the years, becoming more competitive and complex. While we keep pace with the latest technological advances and offer innovative products and services, our morale and integrity have been consistent since we opened in 1993. We want to preserve the basic principles of using bank cards: they should help businesses and customers to trade. Our goal is to facilitate that in a way that enhances commerce, not deprive it of it with additional taxes. We provide our customers with quality, affordable, honest bank card processing services that will stimulate growth and make a long-term, useful partnership. Because of the term bankcard now generic application, we receive miss-directed calls almost every day. Some companies do not include debits in their names, but use it as a tax descriptor, and on the contrary, it is also true. We do not change our name because of our long history and customers who exactly associate it with our exclusive trading services. The unfortunate mtot card coincidence is just that unfortunate coincidence. Since we've been a boutique provider with more than 25 years of business, we want to preserve the integrity of our business name, and when we get inaccurate calls, we can at least try our best point merchants in the right direction, and offer a safe alternative if they would like to switch providers.
